A Presumption Against Extrajurisdictionality

By John H. Knox

In deciding whether federal statutes reach outside the United States, the Supreme Court employs a presumption against extraterritoriality. Its jurisprudence construing the canon has been inconsistent, however, and lower courts have amplified the confusion. This article proposes that the Court look for guidance to the international law of legislative jurisdiction. A presumption against extrajurisdictional, rather than extraterritorial, application of federal statutes would be more predictable and would better comport with reasonable assumptions of congressional intent.

Power and Persuasion in Investment Treaty Interpretation: The Dual Role of States

By Anthea Roberts

States entering into investment treaties establish dual roles for themselves as treaty parties (with an interest in interpretation) and actual or potential respondents in investor-state disputes (with an interest in avoiding liability). By viewing states primarily as respondents rather than also as treaty parties, investment tribunals often ignore the relevance and persuasiveness for interpretation of those parties’ subsequent agreements and practice. The approach proposed here seeks to recalibrate interpretive power between states and tribunals by increasing consideration of such evidence.

Military Lawyers on the Battlefield: An Empirical Account of International Law Compliance 1
By Laura A. Dickinson
This empirical study, based on personal interviews, draws on insights from organizational theory to consider how military lawyers embedded with troops can help produce battlefield decisions that comply with international legal norms. These lawyers appear to be most likely to function effectively and encourage legal compliance if certain organizational features are present. Accordingly, focusing on the links between organizational structure, institutional culture, and legal compliance through more nuanced qualitative analysis should contribute to a better understanding of international law compliance.

By Willem van Genugten
The negotiation of the 2007 Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples prompted the airing of African views on the protection of indigenous peoples, illustrated here by such issues as preferential treatment, collective versus individual rights, and the right to self-determination. The author stresses the need for systematic consideration of African particularities in focusing on the interactions between indigenous, national, and international law, exemplified by South African case law, which is seen as a laboratory where all these strands converge.
